GET STARTED

LEARNING GOALS

In this unit, you

- talk about a life-changing decision
- talk about a memoir
- discuss life in the past
- read about memories
- write a report

A Read the unit title and learning goals. People who have experienced the same thing may remember it differently. Why might that be?

B Look at the picture. When you revisit places, you may be struck by how similar or different they are now. Who might be holding the old photo, and why?

C Read Kate's message. What strong memories do you have that are not visual but are based on one of your other senses?

KATE SANDS

@KateS

I've been thinking about memories and how important sounds, smells, and tastes are to me—even the feel of sand between my toes!

Have your Ss do the task for a couple of minutes. Then check the answers in class.

Match the words with the definitions.

KATE SANDS

@KateS

Today I'm thinking about how one little room key changed my life.

A Look at the title. What is meant by "small moments"?

Small Moments That Changed Your Life

SALIM I saw a flyer for a surfing class and decided to sign up for it. Now I spend as much time on the waves as I can!

MEI I just kind of fell into my career. I didn't get around to turning in an application for an office job I wanted, and I ended up working for a food truck and eventually getting my own food truck!

ANA My mom talked me into taking a karate class, and some of the girls I met there are still my best friends.

TIM I met up with friends for coffee and fell in love with our server!

Readers: Tell us your story, but keep it short!

TONY I ran into an old teacher of mine at the market and told him I was looking for work. He gave me the name of a friend who was hiring, I turned in an application, and two days later I had a job!

MAHA I started taking guitar lessons because I came across my dad's old guitar in the attic. Now I play all the time.

HUGO A friend decided to pass up an offer to photograph a wedding. The people needed someone urgently, and I was standing right there, so he recommended me for the job. I've been photographing weddings ever since!
